There are two environments for quotations: `quote` and `quotation`. `quote` is used either for a short quotation or for a sequence of short quotations separated by blank lines:

```
US presidents ... pithy remarks:
\begin{quote}
The buck stops here.

I am not a crook.
\end{quote}
```

US presidents have been known for their pithy remarks:

> The buck stops here.
>
> I am not a crook.

Use the `quotation` environment for quotations that consist of more than one paragraph. Paragraphs in the input are separated by blank lines as usual:

```
Here is some advice to remember:
\begin{quotation}
Environments for making
...other things as well.

Many problems
...environments.
\end{quotation}
```

Here is some advice to remember:

> Environments for making quotations can be used for other things as well.
>
> Many problems can be solved by novel applications of existing environments.
